Murkowski offers support to Democratic senator targeted for retribution by Trump administration

By James Brooks,
Alaska Beacon

Alaska Republican Sen. Lisa Murkowski denounced the Trump administration's targeting of Arizona Democratic Sen. Mark Kelly on Tuesday, saying on social media that its actions are "reckless and flat-out wrong."

Kelly, a retired astronaut and U.S. Navy officer, was one of six Democratic senators who appeared in a video directed to members of the U.S. military. In that video, they say members of the military are being subject to political pressure and should uphold the Constitution and ignore "illegal orders."

Afterward, President Donald Trump took to social media to call for all six to be executed for treason. The FBI has begun to make inquiries about the video, and the Department of Defense have vowed to investigate. Secretary of Defense Pete Hegseth has been particularly critical of Kelly.

"Senator Kelly valiantly served our country as an aviator in the U.S. Navy before later completing four space shuttle missions as a NASA astronaut," Murkowski said. "To accuse him and other lawmakers of treason and sedition for rightfully pointing out that servicemembers can refuse illegal orders is reckless and flat-out wrong. The Department of Defense and FBI surely have more important priorities than this frivolous investigation."

It has become unusual for elected Republican officials to speak in defense of elected Democrats, particularly when it places them at odds with President Donald Trump, who remains popular among Republican voters, even if his approval overall is low.

Alaska Republican Sen. Dan Sullivan previously expressed concerns about the possible politicization of the military during the presidency of Democrat Joe Biden.

Asked about the situation with Kelly, Sullivan criticized the Democratic video and the administration's response to it.

"The Democrats in the video have offered no explanation of what they considered to be an illegal order, sowing confusion and politicizing the ranks in a way that risks undermining military discipline, lethality and readiness," his office said in a written statement.

The statement went on to say that "he does not believe it is a good use of the Pentagon's time to investigate Senator Kelly" because "such an investigation has the potential to turn into a major distraction for our military."

The office of Rep. Nick Begich, R-Alaska, did not return a text message or email seeking comment.

•Alaska state utility regulators

"We find that disclosure … might create a competitive or financial disadvantage," the regulators concluded.

In addition, unlike the way that water and power utilities' rates are regulated by the RCA, GCI's prices are not regulated by state law.

For that reason, plus the fact that GCI Liberty's combined financial statements are publicly available, regulators concluded, "public interest in disclosure … is outweighed by the potential competitive financial disadvantages demonstrated in the petition."

On the request for secrecy covering Malone himself, Malone's attorneys argued that he isn't legally obligated to provide financial support to GCI Liberty, and thus, "requiring the submission of his personal financial information would not advance a public interest objective."

They also argued that in 2018, when wealthy telecom entrepreneur Jane Eudy obtained full control of several Interior Alaska telecom companies by taking 100 percent control of American Broadband, a national firm, the RCA did not require her to publicize her finances.

Members of the public argued that disclosure is in the best interests of Alaskans.

Megan Johnson, one of dozens of people who offered public comments, said, "Telecommunications in Alaska are not just about convenience, they are lifelines for education, healthcare, emergency services, and economic development, especially in rural and Indigenous communities. Decisions made by owners unfamiliar with our terrain, seasonal challenges, and cultural values risk undermining the progress we've made in closing the digital divide."

Kirsa Hughes-Skandijs of Juneau wrote, "I am gravely concerned about the idea of concealing financial information, particularly when it comes to consolidating control of a public good like an ISP, broadcast and telecommunications company."

Commissioners ultimately sided with Malone.

"We find the circumstances presented in these dockets similar to those we considered (in 2018)," they wrote.

"We find that under the circumstances … no legitimate public interest will be served by requiring Dr. Malone to provide a statement of financial condition."

Commissioners are scheduled to make a final determination on Malone's takeover by April 1.

•Alaska Senate Republicans

In the House, Republicans didn't wait for their vacancies to be filled before selecting a minority leader to replace Rep. Mia Costello, R-Anchorage, who stepped down from the role last month.

On Saturday, the House's minority Republicans picked Rep. DeLena Johnson, R-Palmer, as Minority Leader and Rep. Justin Ruffridge, R-Soldotna, as Minority Whip.

The House is divided between a 21-person multipartisan majority and a 19-person Republican minority. Of those 19 Republican seats, only 17 are filled, and several members were absent from Saturday's vote due to prior commitments.

On social media, Reps. Kevin McCabe, R-Big Lake, and Jamie Allard, R-Eagle River, denounced the choices, saying in part that they were untimely.

In a news release announcing the vote, Johnson said, "I don't want to see the House Republicans go too long without leadership in place. If we had at least one of the leadership positions filled, we could have carried on but without either position we were lacking in key tools to move forward and be effective as a caucus."
